Dr. Bryan Young

CJNS Editor-in-Chief

Dr. Bryan Young graduated in Medicine from the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon.

After interning and a medical residency at Vancouver General Hospital, he returned to his home province to practice for two years before "seeing the light" and taking a neurology residency at the University of Western Ontario, followed by a fellowship in EEG and Epilepsy with Drs. Warren Blume and John Girvin. He then returned to his home province for 3 years, working at University Hospital in Saskatoon in the newly created Department of Clinical Neurosciences.

Yet again, Bryan returned to London, Ontario where he has finally settled and worked for the past 30 years, with the exception of sabbaticals in California and the University of Toronto.

Dr. Young has published over 150 peer reviewed papers, 5 books and over 50 book chapters. His main interest is in neurocritical care, which he was inspired to pursue by the influence of his close friend, former mentor and fellow Saskatchewanian, Dr. Charles Bolton, now at Queen's University in Kingston, Ontario.

Dr. Young is especially proud to serve as Editor-in-Chief of The Canadian Journal of Neurological Sciences for the past 5 years. He hopes to further enhance the quality and impact factor of the Journal in the remaining 3 years of his tenure, with the help of a talented group of associate editors and the excellent staff in the Journal office.

Dr. Young has recently become a proud new grandfather of twin boys, Harry and Charlie.
